Rotarians brave rain to grab priceless PR opportunity at Rose Parade

Rotary's float in the 2006 Rose Parade survived the California rains over New Year's weekend to bring the "Magic of Caring" message to millions of television viewers around the world.

Since 1980, Rotary has entered a float in the famous Tournament of Roses parade as a way to raise awareness and promote the organization. Every year, the float is entirely funded by Rotarian donations and decorated by volunteers who are a part of the worldwide Rotary family, including Interactors, Rotaractors, and scholarship recipients.

"This year, we had 1,400 volunteers decorating the float in pre-arranged sessions," says Rotarian Jim Miceli, chair of the Rotary Rose Parade Float Committee. He explained that the float's theme, the Magic of Caring, was designed to appeal to children and adults alike and spread awareness of Rotary's commitment to eradicating polio while matching the overall parade theme "It's Magical." Eight Interactors were also invited to be riders in the parade, representing the Rotary International districts of Southern California.

Although Miceli is a member of the Rotary Club of Universal City-Sunrise, California, USA, he is careful to point out that the float is not a club- or RI-sponsored project.

"The float is a separate entity," he notes, "though we do have the blessing of Rotary International."

To express Rotary's approval, RI Directors David Hossler and Ken Morgan braved the downpour to join nearly 100 other Rotarians cheering from the curbs of Colorado Boulevard, where more than a million onlookers traditionally line up to watch the parade.

But it wasn't just parade goers who learned about Rotary's service work. This year, 40 million Americans watched the Rose Parade on TV, in addition to the millions of international viewers in 89 territories around the world.
